Well-written and well-edited abstracts are greatly appreciated by the committee members who evaluate the proposals, and also help us in producing speedy and accurate online and printed programs.

Please note the following details of format.

Names of presenters are usually listed in the program in “Western” order. (Exceptions are sometimes made.)

The affiliation follows, separated by a comma. The name of the department or faculty is not given. The name of the city or country is usually omitted. There is no visible distinction in the affiliation of a graduate student or a member of faculty.

The title of the paper is given in italics. Follow American, not British, style in capitalizing all words in the title apart from prepositions and articles.

Leave a blank line before beginning the abstract. Do not indent the first line of the abstract.

Try to keep your abstract to a single paragraph. If it is necessary to use two paragraphs, then put a blank line before the second paragraph.

The abstract should be in English, and clearly written. Avoid jargon. Non-native speakers should have someone check the spelling, grammar, and word use. In some cases it is helpful to include Japanese or Chinese script for names or special terms. It is also possible to include accented characters (áèôü) or the macron (ōū). If you include the macron for Japanese words, then please do so consistently.
